Tell students upfront what you will be looking for in their papers. Then keep this focus in mind when formulating comments on each paper. If you're concentrating on argument, provide direct feedback on each student's argument. For example: "Your argument is strong, clearly stated, and supported by ample evidence."

It's okay to use "you" when saying good things, but direct criticisms to what the paper lacks, not what the student seems to lack. Similarly, when making comments about needs, say things like, "This paper needs a clear central idea," rather than "You need a clear central idea here."

~~Recommendations for Writing Comments on Student Papers~~

Strategy #1: End Notes (or Head Notes) and Marginal Comments. As described above, one very common approach to commenting on student papers is to combine end notes that provide a "big picture" perspective with marginal comments that illustrate specific instances of the strengths and weaknesses described in the end notes.

It's important to focus on the child's efforts in the comments, framing the positive. Use comments like: Your student comes to school each day prepared to work hard. Your child exhibits exceptional focus and diligence in their work. Your student is excellent at taking ownership of their learning. Your student has a fantastic work ethic.

When grading essays, write numbers instead of comments. When students get their essays back, they look at the number on the essay and its corresponding comment on the handout. You can use the numbers for holistic evaluation or for specific parts of the essay. This system works for formal essays, informal writing, timed writing, and test writing.

There are two main types of comments you can offer your students: error correction and content/ideas critique. Content/ideas critique focuses on "what you write". These comments evaluate the student's ability to write a focused paper with support and a logical development of ideas. Error correction emphasizes "how you write".
