Extending my lease stacked up. The total cost was about £8,000, plus £2,000 in professional fees. Letting the lease slip to 80 years would have made it £15,000 more expensive to extend. And the property would have been harder to sell and worth less. The fall in value would have been more than I spent.

The Housing White Paper, Fixing our broken housing market (February 2017), included a commitment to "improve consumer choice and fairness in leasehold". The consultation paper, Tackling unfair practices in the leasehold market, marked the first step in fulfilling this commitment. The paper included, amongst other things, proposals to tackle the sale of new-build houses on a leasehold basis and to control ground rent levels in new lease agreements.
