Leading is a privilege. It's not what you've got ... it's what you do with it. All about getting a grip of your leadership coaching role. As the person responsible for our approach to fairness in the organisation I am often struck with a sense of imposter syndrome, because the fact is, I'm a middle-aged white dude with a decent education who comes from a stable, supportive, nuclear family.

"It's not what you've got, it's what you do with it" is one line that I'm fairly sure I was told and / or read at least a few times. It's the same with a lot of things. Particularly knowledge. About anything really. But, of course, in this case about health, fitness, weight loss, etc. We all know enough to get in better shape.

Its not what you've got, but what you do with it. The majority of marketers believe they are making sufficient use of data. However, according to a recent Forbes study, only 10 per cent managed more than half of their marketing using big data, highlighting Dan Ariely of Duke University's idea that, "big data is like teen sex - everybody is talking about it, everyone thinks everyone else is doing it, so everyone claims they are doing it."
