are meaningful gestures. Gesture in music performs a fundamental role in the generation of meaning (Henrotte 1992; Lidov 1987). In a certain way, we have learned to understand musical sounds with the aid of the gestures that produce and represent these sounds. As G. Kurtenbach and E. Hulsten have noted, the function of gesture

In music, gesture is any movement, either physical or mental. As such "gesture" includes both categories of movements required to produce sound and categories of perceptual moves associated with those gestures. The concept of musical gestures has received much attention in various musicological disciplines in recent years. For example, the "musical" movement from a close-position tonic C major chord to a close-position dominant G major chord requires on the piano the physical movement from each
