One can gain a sense of the distinctions in Strike Strategy, a 1950 book by Steel Workers Organizing Committee organizer and Communist Party member John Steuben, who Goldfield mentions was a part of the team that organized steel in 1937, using the manual on organizing by William Z. Foster. Steuben's book, denounced widely by liberals when it was published, summarized a class conscious union perspective, one with a long lineage both outside and inside the Party, and in fact some of it ...
