The second purpose of What's Wrong with Postmodernism is to defend deconstruction--and its patron saint, Jacques Derrida--against the accusations of postmodernist irrationalism found in Jürgen Habermas's The Philosophical Discourse of Modernity and John M. Ellis's Against Deconstruction. Norris contends that deconstruction, properly understood, is not itself guilty of postmodernist irrationalism, even if Derrida's epigones sometimes are.

What's wrong with Stephen Hicks' explaining postmodernism? That it misrepresents the philosophical ideas it references, does not meet minimal standards of scholarship (in the sense of supporting its claims with evidence), and in general does not give significant indication that it represents reliable information or scholarship on the topics it discusses.
